

The Management Contradictionary defines the real meaning of over 1,000 management terms. The shock of recognition, the juxtaposition of incongruous facts and fictions, and the undermining of authority, all combine to create a humorous debunking of the world of work. As a funny business tool kit, it provides antidotes to obfuscation and ammunition with which to fight obscurantism. Defend yourself against the jargon and the clichés of business and government!

Benjamin Marks SLNSW is a prolific author of his own numerous works and a card-carrying member of the State Library of New South Wales. A critic of such newspapers as The Sydney Morning Herald and The New York Times, his views go unchallenged at universities around the world. Born into slavery to the Commonwealth of Australia, he also works for the tax office.

Rodney Marks is Australia's (mis)leading comedian. He is a corporate impostor who infiltrates business events with his hoaxes and jokes. Most managers do the same, but he waits his turn to speak - and his fraudulent keynote addresses are exposed. Qualified to say nothing at length, he professes to have held appointments as artist-in-residence at Harvard University, the AGSM, UNE and the Macquarie Dictionary.

Robert Spillane is Professor of Management and former Dean of the Macquarie Graduate School of Management in Sydney. He teaches philosophy in the hope that it will be applied to management and psychology in the hope that it will not. He has written more than 110 professional articles that nobody reads, nine books most of which are out of print, and a play Entertaining Executives with which he hopes to make a fortune.
